Alexandra and Her Daughters.

The Marquis de L. n. owns a statuette of white marble by a celebrated sculptor. It represents a lady of the Court of Henry II. Her frail and pliant figure is molded in a long brocade petticoat, slightly turned up on one site. Her bust is encased in a stiff waist, loaded with precious stones. The head is delicate and noble, with a profile of the Renaissance, and her features are chispled as finely as a cam o. A cap adorned with stream og feathers hides a portion of her hair. Suon is this statuette-a jawel become a woman-a little fairy-half cb j ot of art, half apporition. It is the portrait of Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, by M. D'Epinay. An exquisite and truly royal image, representing better than any other an almost superpatural beauty.

O ce descended from her pedestal the princess becomes a gentle, king young woman, a careful mother and an unprecending on zen like house wife. It is noticeable that when people sack to praise a princess they call her citizen like, while to praise of an ordinary citizen's wife ther will say that she is a princes to manner. A ilendtog of these we qualities, so vastly different from one acouser, is use ssary to the real gentle woman. She must be a princess in neart. in soul, in generous sentiments, to courage and is appearance, and a bourgeouse in hospitality. in the love of the fireside, in the care of her children and in price of sol wise economy.

Every morning as 9 o'clock the three daughters of the Pricess of Wales take their music lesson. They have "Mamma" waked up, who, a few moments later, apecars in her oressing gown and remains with them till the lesson i over. Nothing leterests the Princess more than the education of her daughters. In muste chiese fully approcate their progress, being hers if a consummate mu ic an. Her delicate, dreamy, thoroughly Danish nature betrays itseit in her touch. She doice, above all, on the melodies of Chopin and Schumano, and she plays them with wood-riu; talent. The three young Princisie-Louise, Visto ria and Maud-differ as greatly in character as ie physiognomy. The eldest, Louise, has the fice fia ares and the grace of her mother. She is gootie, gay and affable-in short, the Parisienne of the three. Vicoria, the second daughter, is the image of her father. She is proud, rather reserved, and attaches herself little to people. When she does grow fond of some one, however, her affection never wavers. She unites to a thorough consciousness of her own dignity a generous heart, castly moved. Her intellect, which is greatly developed, only renders her the more engaging. The younges s's er, Princess M.u.i. cao s.ill be called a baby. She is but ten years of age. In appearance she h are a great likeness to her grand norh r, the Queen. She is good-hear ed, and at times even a little strous. The private apartments of the Princess of Wales, both at Sandringham and at Mariburough House, are fitted up completely in the French style. One would believe one self transported to a mansion in the Champs. Elysees contiered about everywhere on plush covered tables are an infinity of knick knacks, such as small nore lain dogs, bird cages with stuffel birds, figures in Dresden china tiny flower stands of Faience or Sevres, ink stands, blotters, knives and what not, just as in the shops of Rue de la Paix. The Princess' writing paper always comes from Paris, as well as her dressing tables and all the latest fashionable baubles. Her different pieces of furniture are sucrounded by low screens, which in many cases she herself has emb oldered. Many objects in ivery, ensmel, silver and mother of pearl recall Prince "Bertie's" voyage to India.

Friendship, grace and kindness-such is the motto of that royal home, where Paris is proud to occupy so large a space.—Paris Figuro.

WHY IT PAYS TO READ .- One's physical frame—his body, his muscles, his feet, hi hands-is only a living machine. It is his mind, controlling and directing that mac line, that gives it power and efficacy. The successful use of the body depends wholly upon the mini-upon its atili y to direct the will. If one ties his arm to a sling it becomes weak and finally powerless. Krep it in active exactse, and it requires vigor and strength, and is due. plined to use this strength as desired, just as one's mind, by active exercise to thinking. respining, studying, observing, acquires vigor er ngth, power of concentration and direction. Pointy, then, the man who exercise his mind in reading and thinking gives it greater power and efficiency, and greater ability to direct the efforts of the physical frame-his work-to better results than he can who merely or mainly uses his mu-cles. If a man reads a book or paper, even one he knows to be erroneous, it elps him by the effort to combat the errors. Tae combat juvigorates his mind.
